Excerpt from Fundamentals Of French: A Combination Of The Direct And Grammar Methods

The great number of textbooks for elementary French work already in existence makes it necessary to prefix a word of justification and explanation to this new attempt. It will be conceded by most teachers that the problem of French instruction has various sides, the training of the tongue to speak the language, the training of the ear to understand it when spoken, the training of the mind to a reading knowledge of it. The grammatical method of instruction attained the last of those results in a measure, the phonographic and conversational methods attain the former to a limited extent, though the pupil rarely pushes his knowledge beyond the conversational beginnings to familiarity with literary values. The method here presented which I have developed during fifteen years of teaching, after trying and abandoning other methods, has the advantage of attaining all the ends of instruction above proposed with economy of effort and logic of progress. Its eclectic character, its combination of the Direct and the Grammatical methods, will be noted by the teacher examining its series of lessons and the following stories and letters. It allies itself with the conversational method by its use of French in the classroom, thus training the ear and tongue of the student, and giving him the satisfaction of real contact with the life of the language, but English is used at any moment where a construction or idea must be made clear - at any moment, in short, where it is economy of effort to resort to the mother-tongue. I'm super hyped about the VR, but you obviously knew that already because of my last blogpost. There were a few hiccups because I ordered it online and I was working during the time it came. I stressed, freaked, jumped and finally gave up on the thought I got to play on the day it came out. But luck was on my side and when I got home, 20 minutes later the VR glasses arrived! In this post I will take you with me on my first experience with virtual reality. Was it as awesome as I hoped? Or is nauseating and not really my cup of tea? Read and find out!
