Excerpt from Aspects, Aorists and the Classical Tripos in my life, only twice, it has happened to me to fall in love with a language. Once, long ago, with Greek, again, only yesterday as it seems to me, with Russian. To fall in love with a language is an enchanting experience. You feel as though you were born again, you wonder how you could ever have lived without your new love; life seems growing richer every moment, you pity all the poor heathen who have never found the light. It is well to be off with the old love before you are on with the new. Not so. In the free spaces of the spirit there are no exclusions, no jealousies. People come to me and say I hear- you have given up Greek and are devoting yourself to Russian. As if I could give up Greek. It is part of my body and bones. No, thank heaven, the new love has only given new life to the old. First, to clear the ground, to fall in love with a language is not to fall in love with a literature. It is well to note - a fact too often forgotten - that a rich language does not necessarily mean a rich literature. The stock and notable example is drawn from Semitic languages. Arabic is exceedingly rich in vocabulary, its literature well - of great specialist interest but singularly jejune. Hebrew is poor and sparse as a language, but its literature - incomparable. The reason of this distinction is clear enough and for my argument important. Language is the unconscious or at least subconscious product of the group, the herd, the race, the nation. Literature is the product more or less conscious of the individual genius, using of course the tools made by the blind herd, but, after the manner of live organisms, shaping these tools even as he uses them. When we love a language as contrasted with a literature, we fall under the spell not of a person, an individual genius, but of a people imaged in the speech they have made. What was the spell cast by Greek? It was not the spell of Welcome to the blog of Joan le Grande. I'm changing the blog to english so forgive me the dutch articles before. I already translated a few, keeping it up! Anyway, stay tuned for lifestyle articles and reviews about games or other nerdy stuff. Enjoy! Categories Comics Games Playstation 4 Wii U Lifestyle Posted by Joan le Grande in Games, Playstation 4 Leave a comment Tagsexperience, first look, Games, Playstation 4, Playstation VR review, ps4 VR review, virtual reality YES YES YES. I'm super hyped about the VR, but you obviously knew that already because of my last blogpost. There were a few hiccups because I ordered it online and I was working during the time it came. I stressed, freaked, jumped and finally gave up on the thought I got to play on the day it came out. But luck was on my side and when I got home, 20 minutes later the VR glasses arrived! In this post I will take you with me on my first experience with virtual reality. Was it as awesome as I hoped? Or is nauseating and not really my cup of tea? Read and find out!
